PROCEEDINGS IN THE HOUSE.

The Chaphain, in the opening prayer, made a very appropriate allusion to the State and hational grief at the death of Mr. Summer. Quite a number of visitors were present on the floor and in the galerice, withiam Lloyd Garrison occupying a front seat on the floor. At a quarter past two Mr. rhillips, of Salem, chalman of the committee, presented the resolutions, which were read by the Speaker while the House maintained a deathlike stillness. Mr. Phillips, after the reading of the presolutions which have just been read from the Chair I shall utter but few words. It is too true that Charles Summer no longer lives. The great Senator we have loved so well has passed from earth. His life is ended; his record is made up. It remains f entry into public life. Never when his election has been in controversy have they failed to so vote as to make his return absolutely certain. But at the extra session of the Legislature, held in 1872, a resolution was adopted, perhaps hastily, which he considered a censure and a rebuke to him. It seemed undeserved. It affected his health and caused him many hours of suffering and bain. The next Legislature, already elected when the resolution was adopted, relused to reschild it, and it remained unrepealed for more than a year; but when the people of the common wealth could act they elected the present Legislature, which has, without delay, annulled the resolution of censure, and sent to our senators and Representatives in washington copies of the rescinding resolution, which has been read in both tranches of Congress, in the Senate, most singularly, at the very list session of that body held before our Senator's death and in his presence. Surely, sir, we may inculitate ourselves that we have done him justice, and that now no concemnation of him stands unrescinded upon the records of this Commonwealth. Sir, the great Senator, the honest man, the friend of the oppressed, the hisustrious citizen, honored and respected everywhere, has gone. In his dying hours, he was true to the cause to which he had devoted his life, and urged, almost with his last breath, that his civil rights bill should be akeen care of. May we do what we can to aid in the accomplishment of this last wash, and may it be our endeavor to emilate his example of devotion to every duty, and thus to show that we have not forgotten his teachings. Mr. Speaker—I move that the resolutions be adopted.

Mr. Speaker—I move that the resolutions be adopted.

Mr. Codman, of Boston, was the next speaker, and he began with a brief reference to the men who have been providentially raised, in their country's time of need, to meet the exigencies of every period, and said that he whom we mourn to-day was one of those providentially sent, and to him seems to have been adotted the task to arouse the consciences of the American people. His voice was always urging the American people forward. He was exhorting, urging and denouncing, in and out of season, until the great idea of his life was attained. He might change his party, but the colored race understood there was no change in his sentiments toward them. He loved, he said, to think of Mr. Sumner as a Boston born and educated man. With menus in all parts of the world, where ever were friends of liberty, art, literature and science, still Boston was his lavorite city. Never since John Wunthrop landed here has a greater Bostonian lived. While Charles Sumner, in his aims as a statesman, was pure and lofty, while his integrity was unimpeached, his private life was spotless and no blot, on his character can be discovered.

while his integrity was unimpeached, his private hife was spottess and no blot on his character can be discovered.

Mr. Sancer, of Danvers, said when the great and the good die, it is well to pause, and to-day it is well to call up the great and noble life of Charles Summer, the ripe truit of our schools and universities. He was not only a citizen of Massachusetts, but of the country. His charity was unfalling and his love of country pure and true. He was great as a scholar, a statesman, one who was never compromised. His voice gave forth no uncertain sound, and he was found in the straight and narrow path of truth. He was a man of lame, not of a dogma, but of generous principles. Nothing that is truly great and divine ever dies, and he lives and our children will read his words with delight. We call him dead, but he will speak to us forever.

A TOUCHING SCENE.

Mr. SMITH, of Cambridge, took the floor, and addressed the Speaker, but was 80 overcome with emotion that he buried his face in his hands and wept like a child as he took his scat, unable to speak a word.

Mr. His of Foston said that our friend from cak a word. Mr. Hals, of Boston, said that our friend from speak a word.

Mr. Hale, of Boston, said that our friend from Cambridge had made the most eloquent speech possible. He then proceeded to say that it was peculiarly appropriate that a word should be spoken to the memory of Mr. Sumner in this hall. He never neld an office by popular election or an important office by Executive appointment. He went to the Senate as a comparatively unknown man, and it was there that he had made his lame. He then spoke of Mr. Sumner as a debater and a lawyer. He also spoke of the lessons of his life, which should have the tendency to give to the country a purer political atmosphere.

Mr. J. E. Fitzgerald, of Boston, said the refrain seemed to come from the whole people that the republic has not his equal left. He was endeared to the people, and now that jealousy is dead beside his grave, all come to pay tribute to a noble, pure and spotiess life. The appreciation of his life was to be shown not so much by speeches as by placing in the Senate chamber a worthy successor, who shall possess in some degree the matchiess integrity of him whose loss we mourn.

Mr. Palmer, of Boston, spoke of the general sorrow and greef of the whole country at his death, which no power of thought or speech was able to express. That tongue which might perform such a service on such an occasion was now speechless in death. Sumner is dead, and the nation and the world mann him as the great philanthropic statesman of America. Massachusetts mourns him with a tenderer love, as her honored son.

The resolutions were adopted by a unanimous rising vote.

Action of the Worcester City Government. WORCESTER, March 13, 1874. At a special meeting of the city government tonight a committee was appointed to take suitable notice of the demise of Senator Sumner committee was appointed to attend the uneral. The church bells are to be toked while the funeral train is passing through the city, and the depot is to be draped in mourning. The colored citizens also held a meeting toking and a lopted resolutions expressive of respect to his memory and appointed a committee to attend the funeral.

THE FEELING IN NEWARK.

In Newark the news of Senator Sumner's death has created a feeling of profound sorrow among all classes of the community, but neither in respect to his memory, nor that of the late ex-President Filimore, have the sity authorities—the Mayor being absent on a tour South—thought proper to order any public demonstration of sorter and the city flags are two hours in delivery. It was row, such as the placing of the city flags and defence without dissent, and was used are do not seen unmitdful of the debt they owe the great Massachusetts Senator and anti-sinvery advocate. They have met and passed suitable resolutions in memoriam, and, among other tangs, recommended that all colored citizens trial.

LAST OF THE ANTI-SLAVERY PIO-

WASHINGTON, March 12, 1874 With the death of Charles Sumner the last of the small band of the leaders of the anti-slavery cause in the Senate of the eventful period between 1850 and 1860, has been withdrawn, unless Vice President Wilson may be excepted. Seward, Chase, Hale and now Sumner, have been gathered to their fathers, and the bald and flery "Old Ben Wade" has retired to such complete isolation from public affairs that few beyond his immediate neigh-

As the giants of the Senate, of the epoch between 1830 and 1851, Clay, Webster, Calhoun, Benton, Wright and others, disappeared, these new lights, the ploneers of emancipation, universal liberty and equal rights, came in, and though for years they were regarded by their fellow Senators of the North as impracticable enthusiasts of one idea, and by the men of the South as incendiaries and outlaws, this isolated anti-slavery band of some half a dozen self-sacrificing men, lived to see and to share in the abounding fruits of their persevering labors, in the consummation of a revolution which century.

Among these anti-slavery leaders of the Senate Seward was the wary, diplomatic, cool and calculating directing genius. Hale and Wade were the Seward was the wary, diplomatic, cool and calculating directing genius. Hale and Wade were the bold and ever ready hand-to-hand fighters against the Hotspars of the South. Chase was the strong constitutional pleader of the rights of liberty, and Sumner the merciess denouncer of the usurpations, crimes and barbarism of slavery. Seward, adapting his advances against the common enemy to the general movements of the anti-slavery party, was careful not to advance too fast or too far. Hale and Wade were always first in the skirmish line, while Sumner, leading the general charges against the strongholds of King cotton, though frequently rash in his impetuosity, still advanced the general line of attack and held the ground. With the rebellion, Seward and Chase having been promoted to the Cabinet, Sumner became the recognized republican leader of the Senate; but lacking the diplomatic adrottness necessary to hold this high position, he endangered it more and more from his PERQUENT COLLISIONS WITH THE ADMINISTRATION, and finally lost it from his St. Domingo quarrel with the President, in this matter the Senate; by shed to the alternative of displacing the intractable Senator as Chairman on Foreign Relations or of breaking with the President, deemed it wise and proper to remove Sumner.

The venerable Senator, however, since the reelection of General Grant, had, in his position of armed neutrality, regained much of the confidence of the republicans of the Senate and the respect of both sides of the Chamber. His successful struggle against the proposition for an appropriation of money from the National Treasury for the projected Centennial World's Fair was a source to him of high satisfaction, though his labors and vigilance from day to day for many days against this bill were, doubtless, the immediate cause of his death. The Massachusetts resolutions, withdrawing a legislative censure against him, were submitted in the Senate just in time; for, with the adjournment of that day, he left the Chamber for his deathbed. He was Coming as did come the unexpected blow of his death upon the two Houses, the event has suspended active business therein for the remainder of the week. But already the politicians are dis-

THE QUESTION OF SUMNER'S SUCCESSOR.
Every member of the Massachusetts delegation is said to entertain some hopes of this promotion, except General Butler, and he regards the grapes as very sour. Besides, he has not yet settled his outstanding accounts with the electors on the question of the Governor. Senator Boutwell, meantime, is confined to his house by illness, although it is considered light and only temporary in its character. It would not be surprising, if by way of a retailation upon General Grant for Simmons, the orthodox republicans of Massachusetts were to give him Dawes as Senator in the piace of Summer, although Dawes has lost caste as a croaker.

The two houses, from the depressing checks and duties resulting—first, from the death of ex-President Filimore, and next from the sudden cutting down of Senator Summer—will resume the regular work of the session on Monday. In the Senate Mr. Logan, expansionist, on the banking and currency for the banking has the foor and a day of two may yet logat, expansionist, on the banking and currency question, has the floor, and a day or two may yet be occupied in debate before the decisive vote is taken on the recommitment of the bill—the bill for the transfer of the present national bank currency from the East to the West and South; and in the House, as Monday is omnibus day, we shail probably have some scores of new bills presented, in addition to the thousand already introduced in any event, from these late distressing events, the two houses, with a more serious and earnest attention to the public business before them, will on Monday resume active work, so that the effect, it is to be hoped, will be good for the country.

SEEKING THE SENATORIAL MANTIE.

POSTON, Mass., March 13, 1874. The question of the successor of Senator Sumner is already beginning to be discussed in and around the State House. Of course there are a multitude of aspiring men willing to accept the honor, and it seems certain that the campaign will be a lively and interesting one. It is given out from Washington that General Butler has authorized the state-ment that he is not a candidate for the place. Although he is ambitious for the Governorship, there are many who anticipate that he will abandon his are many who anticipate that he will abandon his claims in that direction and allow himself to be placed "in the hands of his friends" for the Senatorship. Then there is Doctor Loring, now President of the State Senate, who is definitely known to be desirous of political advancement, and his friends are industriously engaged in taking him up. The Doctor, as well as Butler, has in the immediate past, been an unsuccessful aspirant for gubernatorial honors, out latterly it has been believed that he had abandoned that race in sorrowful disgust. Of course Mr. Dawes, who was slaughtered by Boutwell in the stringgle for the vacancy caused by Henry Wilson being made Vice President, will put in his claims for Senatorial honors now; in fact, his friends commenced lobyling for him as soon as it was known that Mr. Sumner was dangerously ill, and the campaign in his behalf is visibly and momentarily increasing. Judge Hoar is also a favorite among many, and his name is irequently and earnestly mentioned. Concerning Governor Washburn, his prospects at the present lime are not specially promising. With either Dawes, Hoar or Washburn, or all of them, in the field, the Butler faction will interpose defensive operations not of a mild character. The same result may follow if General Banks be a candidate, and such an event is among the probabilities. The name of ex-Governor Bullock is not yet much taked about, but it is barely probabilities. The name of many is forward as a compromise candidate, the hast State Convention was selected as the most soutable man to preside. Furthermore, he is somewhat of an orator and statesman, and in other ways is regarded by many as a fit man to receive the Senatorial mantle of the iamented Sumner. claims in that direction and allow himself to be

WALLACE HANGED

The Murderer of Robert Ward Executed at Clarksville, Ark.

LITTLE ROCE, Ark., March 13, 1874. Sidney Wallace was hanged for his crimes at Clarksville to-day. Wallace was about twenty-two years of age, nearly six feet in height, brown hair, wore a blonde mustache and imperial, was rather slim but evidently well put together, and was altogether a very handsome and innocent looking young man. In 1871 Wallace waylaid and attempted o assassinate Joseph Dickey. Dickey was driving with Dudley Turner along the road about a mile and a half from Clarksville, For this he was arrested and indicted for an assault with intent to kill. He managed to get of his chains, jumped out of a second story window and escaped. Wallace met Turner, who was with Dickey when shot and who balked Wallace in his killing, on the streets of Clarksville, in March, 1873. He then, in connection with his brother George, attempted to kill Turner; but they were frustrated in their design by citizens coming to Turner's rescue, not, however, until the Wallaces had battered Turner badly on the head with a Derringer. A few days after this Sidney and George went on the warpath again after Turner. Turner, knowing of their intentions, was well armed. They met in the streets of Clarksville, and this second rencontre ended in the deleat of the Wallaces. Turner shooting and killing George Wallace, Turner was arrested for this, but on examination, as the killing was done in self-defence, he was discharged by Circuit Judge Mears. On the same day that Turner killed George Wallace an old man, named Davis, was shot dead through the window, while sitting by his fireside, surrounded by his family. This murder is also laid at Sidney Wallace's door. Sidney, however, managed to get away, but was finally captured, he having, according to retributive justice, accidentally shot himself in the leg. Just before the Circuit Court of Johnson county met, in March, 1873, Sidney, who seemed to have been a second Jack Sheppard, from the number of his escapes, once more escaped from the Sheriff's coistody. After this ne seems to have been allowed to wander in and out of Clarksville at his own sweet will, for on August 20 last he leisurely rode into the town, hitched his horse in the yard of the court house, and deliberately shot the constable of the township, Robert Ward, who was quietly sitting in front of a drug store. This occurred about sunset, and Wallace, taking advantage of the increasing darkness, escaped on his horse to the friendly woods. Ward lingered for a lew weeks and then died of his wounds. retributive justice, accidentally shot himself in the taking advantage of the increasing darkness, escaped on his horse to the friendly woods. Ward ingered for a few weeks and then died of his wounds.

Shooting of Judge Mears,
About a week after this tragedy Elisha Mears, Circuit Judge of Johnson and several adjoining counties, was shot while going home to his dinner. He received a load of buckshot in his side from a person at that time unknown, who was hidden by the roadside. This bloody deed was perpetrated about a half mile out of Clarksville. Judge Mears ingered as Ward had done for a few days, and then died. Governor Baxter immediately offered a reward of $5,000 for the arrest and conviction of the assassin or assassins. The press and people of the State were much exercised over this outrage, and the prompt action of the Governor accorded well with the sentiments of the people. As Judge Mears had discharged, after a preliminary examination. Dudley Turner, who killed George Wallace, brother of Sidney, in self-defence suspicion immediately rested on Sidney Wallace, who, it was thought, had taken this way to punish the man who justiy allowed the slayer of his brother to go free. Deputy Sheriff Kinne, of Johnson county, collected a posse together and started in search of Wallace. They were unable, however, to find him. He was soon after brought to bay by Sheriff Stout, of Conway county, who captured him near Lewisburg, in that county, and handed him over to the Sheriff of Johnson county, and handed him over to the Sheriff of Johnson county, and handed him over to the Sheriff of Johnson county, and handed him over to the Sheriff of Johnson county, and handed him over to the Sheriff of Johnson county, and handed him over to the Sheriff of Johnson county, and handed him over to the Sheriff of Johnson county, and handed him over to the Sheriff of Johnson county, and handed him over to the Sheriff of Johnson county, and handed him over to the Sheriff of Deputy Sheriff Kline he remarked, "Have a barber to come here; I want to make a decent appearance." In reference to was then taken down stairs to a wagon, into which he jumped lightly and sat on the lid of the coffin in the wagon.

THE SCENE OF DEATH.

The gnard of seventy men closed in and marched to the scaffold in the court house yard. Wallace, the Deputy Sheriff, the ministers and the reporters then ascended the steps of the scaffold, and the guards formed in a square. Deputy Sheriff Kline, who was in charge because of the illness of the Sheriff, then read the death warrant, the prisoner sitting on a chair. Paine then prayed, while most of the people in the crowd uncovered, and also the guards. Kline asked Wallace if he had anything to say. Wallace rose, laced the crowd and said, clearly:—

Gentlemen-Voucher of the people in the crowd uncovered. Gentlemen-Vouche of the crowd and said, clearly:—

Gentlemen-Vouche of the people in the crowd uncovered that the comies must be to God. I die in detence of myself and friends, and I only regret not having a dozen deaths to die.

A COWARD'S APPEAL FOR MERCY.

have to contess must be to God. I die in derence of myseit and friends, and I only regret not having a dozen deaths to die.

A COWARD'S AFFEAL FOR MERCY.

Then he turned his coat collar up and buttoned his coat. They handcufred his hands behind him and strapped his knees and ankies. All who were on the scaffold shook hands with him and bid him "goodby." The black velvet cap was then put on and the noose was slipped over his head. The Rev. Mr. Burrows whispered to him. Sidney cried aloud, "Lord, remember me! Lord, remember me when Thou art in Thy kingdom!" The drop was then sprung and the dooined man fell about four feet. There was a convulsive shake, the hands moved, the body trembled greatly, the hands were open, not clenched, and he was dead. There was a great stillness in the crowd. After twenty minutes the heart was still beating. When he had hung thirty minutes the doctors said that he was dead and cut down the body. It was laid on a mattress in a wagon and sent to his mother's house, according to her request. The doctor said that the neck was dislocated.

The crowd dispersed and the militia marched off. No attempt was made to interfere, as was expected. By some it was stated that the mother had said that the way and he he dead she would come to them.

"I will GET AWAY with HELL!"

There were about 300 armed men in the town. Wallace said, "I got away with these fellows and reckon I will get away with hell." He was hanged twenty leet from where he shot at Ward.
